The Secret Garden

by Frances Hodgson Burnett

While walking in the garden Mary watched a robin and, after following it, discovered a key on the ground.

1. She looked at the key quite a long time. She turned it over and over, and thought about it. All she thought about the key was that if it was the key to the closed garden, and she could find out where the door was, she could perhaps open it and see what was inside the walls, and what had happened to the old rose-trees. It was because it had been shut
5. up so long that she wanted to see it. It seemed as if it must be different from other places and that something strange must have happened to it during ten years. Besides that, if she liked it she could go into it every day and shut the door behind her, and she could make up some play of her own and play it quite alone, because nobody would ever know where she was, but would think the door was still locked and the key buried in the earth. The
10. thought of that pleased her very much.

Living in a house with a hundred mysteriously closed rooms and having nothing whatever to do to amuse herself, had set her inactive brain to working and was actually awakening her imagination.

- She put the key in her pocket and walked up and down her path. No one but herself
15. ever seemed to come there, so she could walk slowly and look at the wall, or, rather, at the ivy growing on it. The ivy was the baffling thing. Howsoever carefully she looked she could see nothing but thickly growing, glossy, dark green leaves. She was very much disappointed as she paced the path and looked over it at the tree-tops inside. It seemed so silly, she said to herself, to be near it and not be able to get in. She took the key in her
 20. pocket when she went back to the house, and she made up her mind that she would always carry it with her when she went out, so that if she ever should find the hidden door she would be ready.

- The skipping-rope was a wonderful thing. The sun was shining and a little wind was blowing – not a rough wind, but one which came in delightful little gusts and brought a
25. fresh scent of newly turned earth with it.

Mary skipped round all the gardens and round the orchard, resting every few minutes. At length she went to her own special path and made up her mind to try if she could skip the whole length of it. It was a good long skip and she began slowly, but before she had gone half-way down the path she was so hot and breathless that she was obliged to stop. She

30. did not mind much, because she had already counted up to thirty. She stopped with a little laugh of pleasure, and there, lo and behold, was the robin swaying on a long branch of ivy. He had followed her and he greeted her with a chirp. As Mary had skipped toward him she felt something heavy in her pocket strike against her at each jump, and when she saw the robin she laughed again.
35. “You showed me where the key was yesterday,” she said. “You ought to show me the door today; but I don’t believe you know!”

The robin flew from his swinging spray of ivy on to the top of the wall and he opened his beak and sang a loud, lovely trill, merely to show off. Nothing in the world is quite as adorably lovely as a robin when he shows off – and they are nearly always doing it.

40. One of the nice little gusts of wind rushed down the path, and it was a stronger one than the rest. It was strong enough to wave the branches of the trees, and it was more than strong enough to sway the trailing sprays of untrimmed ivy hanging from the wall. Mary had stepped close to the robin, and suddenly the gust of wind swung aside some loose ivy trails, and more suddenly still she jumped toward it and caught it in her hand. This she did
45. because she had seen something under it – a round knob which had been covered by the leaves hanging over it. It was the knob of a door.

- She put her hands under the leaves and began to pull and push them aside. Thick as the ivy hung, it nearly all was a loose and swinging curtain, though some had crept over wood and iron. Mary’s heart began to thump and her hands to shake a little in her delight and
50. excitement. The robin kept singing and twittering away and tilting his head on one side, as if he were as excited as she was. What was this under her hands which was square and made of iron and which her fingers found a hole in?

- It was the lock of the door which had been closed ten years and she put her hand in her pocket, drew out the key and found it fitted the keyhole. She put the key in and turned it.
55. It took two hands to do it, but it did turn.

And then she took a long breath and looked behind her up the long path to see if anyone was coming. No one was coming. No one ever did come, it seemed, and she took another long breath, because she could not help it, and she held back the swinging curtain of ivy and pushed back the door which opened slowly – slowly.

60. Then she slipped through it, and shut it behind her, and stood with her back against it, looking about her and breathing quite fast with excitement, and wonder, and delight.

She was standing inside the secret garden.

There was something different about the school playground today: not the usual lull

32 before exams or antispation before sports day. This was a one-off, whatever it was. One thing you couldn't fail to notice on entering the school gates was a sea of 33 hats, as far as the eye could see: not the usual peeked caps but wide-brimmed hats with feathers. There were also helmets (not the bicycle kind) and even some crowns. No-one was wearing modern clothes either; the usual sportswear
A B C D

A B C D

34 were knowhere in sight. The vast majority of children wore robes, some adorned

35 with jewels and others very plane. You could say it was an attempt by the school
A B C D

36 to bring the past to life. In spite of their altered appearance, pupils lined up as normal and Class 5B waited for Mr Holterson to take the register. The only 37 differance on this morning, however, was that pupils answered to the name of their chosen person from history.
A B C D

'Cleopatra! Gandhi! Einstein!... Einstein?'

38 After a slight delay, a mumbled response emerged from the line of pupils.

39 'Wow, Jimmy, that's a really good impersonation. You even sound German!'

'That's because I am Albert Einstein.'

'Very good, Johnny!' the teacher laughed.

But Einstein did not laugh and, instead, started to cough: an old-man's cough that couldn't possibly come from a ten-year-old – could it?

40 Mr Holterson looked worried for a moment, then sheperded the pupils, or rather the phantoms of the past, inside.
