The passage below is from 'The Woman In White', a novel written by Wilkie Collins and published in 1859. In this extract the main character, Walter Hartright, is walking home alone late on a hot summer's night.

1 I had now arrived at that particular point in my walk where the four roads met – the road to
2 Hampstead, along which I had returned, the road to Finchley, the road to West End, and the 3 road back to London. I had mechanically turned in this latter direction when, in one
4 moment, every drop of blood in my body was brought to a stop by the touch of a hand laid
5 lightly and suddenly on my shoulder from behind me.

6 I turned on the instant, with my fingers tightening round the handle of my stick.

7 There, in the middle of the broad, moon-bright high-road – there, as if it had that
8 moment sprung out of the earth or dropped from the heaven – stood the figure of a solitary
9 Woman, dressed from head to foot in white garments, her face bent in grave inquiry on 10 mine, her hand pointing to the dark cloud over London, as I faced her.

11 I was far too seriously startled by the suddenness with which this extraordinary 12 apparition stood before me, in the dead of night and in that lonely place, to ask what she 13 wanted. The strange woman spoke first.

14 “Is that the road to London?” she said.

15 I looked attentively at her, as she put the singular question to me. It was then nearly 16 one o'clock. All I could discern distinctly by the moonlight was a colourless, youthful face,
17 meagre and sharp to look at about the cheeks and chin; large, grave, wistfully attentive eyes;
18 nervous, uncertain lips; and light hair of a pale, brownish-yellow hue. There was nothing
19 wild, nothing immodest in her manner: it was quiet and self-controlled, a little melancholy
20 and a little touched by suspicion; not exactly the manner of a lady, and, at the same time, not 21 the manner of a woman in the humblest rank of life. The voice, little as I had yet heard of it,
22 had something curiously still and mechanical in its tones, and the utterance was remarkably
23 rapid. She held a small bag in her hand: and her dress – bonnet, shawl, and gown all of white
24 – was, so far as I could guess, certainly not composed of very delicate or very expensive

25 materials. Her figure was slight, and rather above the average height – her gait and actions
26 free from the slightest approach to extravagance. This was all that I could observe of her in 27 the dim light and under the perplexingly strange circumstances of our meeting.

28 “Did you hear me?” she said, still quietly and rapidly, and without the least fretfulness
29 or impatience. “I asked if that was the way to London.”

30 “Yes,” I replied, “that is the way: it leads to St John’s Wood and the Regent’s Park. You
31 must excuse my not answering you before. I was rather startled by your sudden appearance 32 in the road.”

33 “You don’t suspect me of doing anything wrong, do you? I have done nothing wrong.
34 I have met with an accident – I am very unfortunate in being here alone so late. Why do you
35 suspect me of doing wrong?”

36 She spoke with unnecessary earnestness and agitation, and shrank back from me 37 several paces.
